Description

A total coverage system with the latest technology

The new Piczel 7011 provides everything you need to connect and operate the plug-and-play components in the box. The 600 line high resolution cameras include professional quality imagers that generate video with exceptional detail. Images captured with all cameras are well reproduced on the 18.5" widescreen LED monitor with resolution settings that far exceed those of a typical CRT monitor. The dynamic contrast ratio keeps details from being lost in dark shadows or washed out with bright objects. The eight channel pentaplex DVR incorporates the latest dual stream H.264 video codec technology. Up to four times more video is stored on the same size hard drive as previous models. Piczel's dual stream video processing records the highest quality video possible to the hard drive while adjusting the image compression to optimize the DVR's internet transmission speed. Catch all of the action with global recording speeds up to 240 ips (30 ips per channel). Smartphone monitoring, e-mail with images, SMS text messaging with an image, or standard text only alarm notification messages provide maximum access and connectivity while you are on the move. The included Central Monitoring Station (CMS) Software gives you the ability to monitor up to 64 cameras on one PC screen (including all 8 from this DVR), with video streaming from multiple DVRs from the Piczel 5200 series, plus the 7007, 7009, and 7200 series systems. Eight external alarm contact inputs add to the flexibility of how events are recorded and alarm e-mail notifications are sent, including the all new Piczel Video Temp Alert (Sam's # 244398). This exclusive accessory displays the temperature of your home or business's monitored area on a camera's video, and triggers your DVR's e-mail feature when there is a problem with heating, cooling, refrigeration units, etc.

Selectable grid video motion detection and fast event search

Video motion detection can be set to record activity to the hard drive, log the event in a list to simplify searches at a future date, and send an e-mail with an attached image of what just happened. To make the video motion detection more accurate and useful, a 13 column by 10 row grid of squares is displayed over each camera view during the motion detection setup process (see the included graphic with the product photos). With 130 small squares superimposed on a camera's view, you can select each square that you choose to be active, triggering an alarm event when there is activity in front of the square. By the same process, you can deactivate any square that lies in an area of known activity that would cause a false alarm, such as a pathway for a pet, or a public access area. Database like storage of video files make retrieval of events a snap. Drill down your searches by date, time, camera, and event type to quickly find the information you are looking for. Play the event or click on to save your selected video to a flash (thumb) drive. While reviewing events from the DVR via the internet, you can easily save the data file to your computer. You can also take a quick snapshot or record live streaming to your PC as you see it happen! Alpha-numeric on-screen titles can be generated for each channel making identification of the source location much easier. 16 external alarm contact inputs add to the flexibility of how events are recorded and alarm e-mail notifications are sent, including the all new Piczel Video Temp Alert (Sam's # 244398). This exclusive accessory displays the temperature of your home or business's monitored area on a camera's video, and triggers the DVR's e-mail feature

With 130 small squares superimposed on a camera's view, you can select each square that you choose to be active, triggering an alarm event when there is activity in front of the square. By the same process, you can deactivate any square that lies in an area of known activity that would cause a false alarm, such as a pathway for a pet, or a public access area. Database like storage of video files make retrieval of events a snap. Drill down your searches by date, time, camera, and event type to quickly find the information you are looking for. Play the event or click on to save your selected video to a flash (thumb) drive. While reviewing events from the DVR via the internet, you can easily save the data file to your computer. You can also take a quick snapshot or record live streaming to your PC as you see it happen! Alpha-numeric on-screen titles can be generated for each channel making identification of the source location much easier. 16 external alarm contact inputs add to the flexibility of how events are recorded and alarm e-mail notifications are sent, including the all new Piczel Video Temp Alert (Sam's # 244398). This exclusive accessory displays the temperature of your home or business's monitored area on a camera's video, and triggers the DVR's e-mail feature

Item Details

High capacity 1TB surveillance hard drive
18.5" Wide screen LED monitor
3G/4G Smartphone monitoring
600 TVL line high resolution imagers with IR Cut filters

Description

A total coverage system with the latest technology

The new Piczel 7011 provides everything you need to connect and operate the plug-and-play components in the box. The 600 line high resolution cameras include professional quality imagers that generate video with exceptional detail. Images captured with all cameras are well reproduced on the 18.5" widescreen LED monitor with resolution settings that far exceed those of a typical CRT monitor. The dynamic contrast ratio keeps details from being lost in dark shadows or washed out with bright objects. The eight channel pentaplex DVR incorporates the latest dual stream H.264 video codec technology. Up to four times more video is stored on the same size hard drive as previous models. Piczel's dual stream video processing records the highest quality video possible to the hard drive while adjusting the image compression to optimize the DVR's internet transmission speed. Catch all of the action with global recording speeds up to 240 ips (30 ips per channel). Smartphone monitoring, e-mail with images, SMS text messaging with an image, or standard text only alarm notification messages provide maximum access and connectivity while you are on the move. The included Central Monitoring Station (CMS) Software gives you the ability to monitor up to 64 cameras on one PC screen (including all 8 from this DVR), with video streaming from multiple DVRs from the Piczel 5200 series, plus the 7007, 7009, and 7200 series systems. Eight external alarm contact inputs add to the flexibility of how events are recorded and alarm e-mail notifications are sent, including the all new Piczel Video Temp Alert (Sam's # 244398). This exclusive accessory displays the temperature of your home or business's monitored area on a camera's video, and triggers your DVR's e-mail feature when there is a problem with heating, cooling, refrigeration units, etc.

Video motion detection can be set to record activity to the hard drive, log the event in a list to simplify searches at a future date, and send an e-mail with an attached image of what just happened. To make the video motion detection more accurate and useful, a 13 column by 10 row grid of squares is displayed over each camera view during the motion detection setup process (see the included graphic with the product photos). With 130 small squares superimposed on a camera's view, you can select each square that you choose to be active, triggering an alarm event when there is activity in front of the square. By the same process, you can deactivate any square that lies in an area of known activity that would cause a false alarm, such as a pathway for a pet, or a public access area. Database like storage of video files make retrieval of events a snap. Drill down your searches by date, time, camera, and event type to quickly find the information you are looking for. Play the event or click on to save your selected video to a flash (thumb) drive. While reviewing events from the DVR via the internet, you can easily save the data file to your computer. Description

A total coverage system with the latest technology

The new Piczel 7011 provides everything you need to connect and operate the plug-and-play components in the box. The 600 line high resolution cameras include professional quality imagers that generate video with exceptional detail. Images captured with all cameras are well reproduced on the 18.5" widescreen LED monitor with resolution settings that far exceed those of a typical CRT monitor. The dynamic contrast ratio keeps details from being lost in dark shadows or washed out with bright objects. The eight channel pentaplex DVR incorporates the latest dual stream H.264 video codec technology. Up to four times more video is stored on the same size hard drive as previous models. Piczel's dual stream video processing records the highest quality video possible to the hard drive while adjusting the image compression to optimize the DVR's internet transmission speed. Catch all of the action with global recording speeds up to 240 ips (30 ips per channel). Smartphone monitoring, e-mail with images, SMS text messaging with an image, or standard text only alarm notification messages provide maximum access and connectivity while you are on the move. The included Central Monitoring Station (CMS) Software gives you the ability to monitor up to 64 cameras on one PC screen (including all 8 from this DVR), with video streaming from multiple DVRs from the Piczel 5200 series, plus the 7007, 7009, and 7200 series systems. Eight external alarm contact inputs add to the flexibility of how events are recorded and alarm e-mail notifications are sent, including the all new Piczel Video Temp Alert (Sam's # 244398). This exclusive accessory displays the temperature of your home or business's monitored area on a camera's video, and triggers your DVR's e-mail feature when there is a problem with heating, cooling, refrigeration units, etc.

Video motion detection can be set to record activity to the hard drive, log the event in a list to simplify searches at a future date, and send an e-mail with an attached image of what just happened. To make the video motion detection more accurate and useful, a 13 column by 10 row grid of squares is displayed over each camera view during the motion detection setup process (see the included graphic with the product photos). With 130 small squares superimposed on a camera's view, you can select each square that you choose to be active, triggering an alarm event when there is activity in front of the square. By the same process, you can deactivate any square that lies in an area of known activity that would cause a false alarm, such as a pathway for a pet, or a public access area. Database like storage of video files make retrieval of events a snap. Drill down your searches by date, time, camera, and event type to quickly find the information you are looking for. Play the event or click on to save your selected video to a flash (thumb) drive. While reviewing events from the DVR via the internet, you can easily save the data file to your computer. You can also take a quick snapshot or record live streaming to your PC as you see it happen! Alpha-numeric on-screen titles can be generated for each channel making identification of the source location much easier. 16 external alarm contact inputs add to the flexibility of how events are recorded and alarm e-mail notifications are sent, including the all new Piczel Video Temp Alert (Sam's # 244398). This exclusive accessory displays the temperature of your home or business's monitored area on a camera's video, and triggers the DVR's e-mail feature
